Utilities update

The Army's gas contractor, Tri-J Industries, has begun gas houseline preparation in Marshall Park (only 7 households require this work) and in Fitch Park (107 households).

Pacific Gas and Electric will join Tri-J beginning the week of June 1 to install gas meters at those residences where plumbing work is required. This will mean that the gas must be turned off while the work is being performed.

Tri-J may do any digging that is necessary the day before PG&E is scheduled to turn off the gas. They will cover the holes to protect residents (particularly children) from accidents.

All residents will be notified by PG&E three days before their gas is scheduled to be turned off. The notification will include a recommended list of actions for the resident.

Please expect the gas to be off all day. PG&E will re-light appliances in each resident's utility closet after the gas meter installation is complete.

Please expect a delay in range operation, as there can be air in the gas line between the meter and the range and it must flow out before ignition can occur.

If you receive a phone call and are asked to touch nine (9), zero (0) on your phone in order for a technician to test your phone, BEWARE!!! This is a Scam!!! By doing as instructed you've just provided the caller [or anyone] access to your phone where they may place long distance calls on your bill.

Service Organizations Review "Singles" Issues

ARMED SERVICE YMCA OF THE USA NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS, Springfield, VA -- A number of private sector organizations committed to the well-being of military personnel met this spring to review issues relevant to the needs and aspirations of young "singles" in the armed forces. At a meeting at Fort Myer, VA, in late April, leaders of organizations that serve the interests and needs of men and women in the military conferred on issues related to this important segment of the nation's military.

"Singles" Demographics

Department of Defense statistics indicate that at least a third of our active duty force is single, which means that there are about 481,000 single Service members currently in the active duty component (Army, Marine Corps, Navy, Air Force and Coast Guard combined). Demographers say that some 75 percent of those single Service men and women -- more than 360,000 individuals -- are between the ages of 18 and 25 years.

The April 24 meeting, hosted by the Armed Services YMCA, resulted from discussions between retired Rear Admiral Frank Gall, Armed Services YMCA executive director; and retired General Carl Mundy, president of World USO.

Gen. Mundy, as former Commandant of the Marine Corps, is deeply sensitive to the dividends that accrue to the armed forces when its members -- both single and married -- embrace healthy and productive lifestyles, as is RADM Gallo, who was deputy chief of Naval Personnel prior to his retirement.

Both the Armed Services YMCA and the USO offer programs specifically designed for Service men and women and military families.

Army retirees say health care is top concern

by Gerry J. Gilmore

WASHINGTON (Army News Service, April 27, 1998) - The Army's 680,000-some retirees have one major issue on their minds - health care.

For the second straight year, the Army Retiree Council reported to Chief of Staff Gen. Dennis J. Reimer that health care was the number-one retiree concern, said Gary F. Smith, director of Army Retirement Services in Alexandria, Va.

The council, composed of 14 retirees, half officer, half enlisted, held its annual Pentagon meeting with the Chief of Staff March 30 to April 3, Smith said. Council members are selected Armywide through Retiree Services offices. The council is co-chaired by retired Lt. Gen. Don Parker and retired Sgt. Maj. of the Army Richard Kidd.

"Accessible, affordable and quality retiree health care is the most compelling issue and the most frightening concern for present and future Army retirees ... the fulfillment of promised lifetime care is a defining moral imperative that inextricably links the welfare of the retiree community with the readiness of America's Army," according to the latest Retiree Council report.

Army leadership, working with the Retiree Council, is making headway to address retiree's health care concerns, Smith said. A Department of Defense retiree dental plan began Feb. 1. Cost of the retiree dental plan is not subsidized by DoD, Smith said, and it's managed by Delta Dental Insurance in California.

Another recent retiree health care initiative involves a test Medicare subvention program, that if implemented, could restore military health care to 30-40 percent of retirees over age 65, Smith said. Other proposals include:

- A reduction of TRICARE (the Department of Defense's health maintenance organization) costs to retirees, part of which involves lowering the program's Standard retiree catastrophic cap from $7,500 to $3,000 a year;
- The adoption of Federal Employee Health Benefit Plan-65 type health coverage for retirees (Medicare-eligible) over age 65;
- A national mail order pharmacy program for Medicare-eligible military beneficiaries.

Retirees and their family members receive military medical care on a space-available basis, Smith said. Since the drawdown began in 1989, he said, a dollar-strapped Army has been challenged to provide health care services to a growing retiree population. Due to downsizing (and greater life expectancy) retirees have outnumbered active duty soldiers since July 1993.

Because of base closings, Smith said, there are fewer installations and military medical treatment facilities to serve retirees and their families. When funding is short, some military hospitals can't care for Medicare-eligible retirees and family members. Currently, retirees lose TRICARE eligibility at age 65 when they become eligible for Medicare.

Under a proposed program called Medicare subvention, Smith said, Medicare-eligible retirees at test sites would be enrolled in TRICARE and military organizations would get some reimbursement from Health Care Financing Administration, the funding arm of Medicare, for treating Medicare-eligible retirees.

Medicare subvention is scheduled for a three-year test scheduled to begin in September this year, Smith said. This could save Medicare money, he said, since military medical care will probably cost less than reimbursement for civilian medical care.

Retired Command Sgt. Maj. Phil Fredrich, now completing his four-year term on the Chief of Staff's Retiree Council, said he's optimistic about the future for retiree health care.

"Look what has been done with the dental plan ... now we have one," said Fredrich, who serves as the retirement services officer at Redstone Arsenal, Huntsville, Ala. "We've got TRICARE for retirees when it once looked as if we would be cut out of care. We're working on Federal Employee Health Benefit Plan-65 and Medicare subvention and other programs to provide support to the retirees of our great Army."
